3. “Genevieve Cohn: Drawing Down the Moon” at Monya Rowe Gallery, New York

Monya Rowe Gallery presents “Drawing Down the Moon,” the first New York solo exhibition of Boston-based artist Genevieve Cohn. In this female-centric show, Cohn “explores ideas centered around collaboration, education, collection and creation,” especially ideas involving groups of women participating in rituals to access a different plane of understanding. From references to the ancient Celtic Samhain Festivals of Ireland to the magic and history of witches and witchcraft, these brightly hued paintings depict rituals connected to the changing of seasons. “I am interested in the way that rituals create something physical and tangible to try to access something beyond our threshold for understanding,” says Cohn according to the gallery statement.

Location: Monya Rowe Gallery, 224 West 30th Street, No. 1005, New York
